Eileen Crosby, Archivist

The Holyoke History Room receives two special paintings

The Dwight family, publishers of the Holyoke Transcript until 1993, donated an oil portrait of William Dwight (1903-1996), who became editor and later publisher of the Transcript after his father's death in 1930. The artist was well-known illustrator and portraitist Roy Spreter. A celebration and unveiling of the portrait took place at the History Room on June 28 and items documenting the work of William Dwight were on display.

Amy Chalifoux Nyzio donated a beautiful watercolor of the Library painted by her mother, the late Loraine L. Chalifoux. Loraine Chalifoux was a Holyoke native and noted New England artist who worked in oil, watercolor, charcoal, pencil, pen & ink, and woodcut prints. Her paintings are in the collections of corporations, colleges, museums and private individuals. An expert on French Impressionism, Loraine continued to teach her ever-popular workshops in the Impressionist style even after brain surgery in 1990. To best preserve the watercolor, it will be placed on display only for brief periods. It can also be viewed at the History Room on request.
